Chapter 1 by N8

Why was it so hard to stay out of foreign affairs?

It all started with Phase I.

This was where our President deported half of our national population.

Everything was hectic during the mass deportation and the economy fell immediately.

That was awful and people went crazy, but Phase II was way worse.

Chapter 2 by Phantim

Phase II was all about control. Now that the country's population had been cut in half, down to "more manageable numbers" it was time for the chains. The world before had been laden with chains, secret fences, and glass ceilings before, sure... but now there was no hiding it. Martial law. The first thing they did was bring everyone into the large cities. Here they could keep an eye on us. Many of those living out in the countryside fought... they were wiped out. Gun ownership had been one of the first things to go, no one could fight back. Even if they did have guns though, it wouldn't have done any good against military's drone technology. Whole towns were wiped out without sending a single soldier. Their farms were taken over the large corporations that now controlled our government. Land ownership was forbidden as well, at least for private citizens. Only the government was allowed to own anything. They graciously offered us the scraps of land that was left. As long as we followed the rules.

Some people tried to organize underground resistance movements, but it was too late. They were hunted down as soon as they popped up. I'm not sure how it works, but they track everything we do. Our emails, calls, conversations, sometimes it even feels like our thoughts. Nothing is safe from them. Passports have long since been done away with, there is no leaving. Life became very hard for everyone who lived here... the cities were slums and the food rations barely got us by. Still, we were surviving.

Then they began Phase III...
